Fitts Zehl LLP is a personal injury and business litigation law firm that represents individuals and businesses against some of the largest companies in the world. The firm is comprised only of trial lawyers, who are currently handling cases all over the country involving serious personal injuries, complicated business disputes and dangerous prescription drugs and other products.

Ryan Zehl's and Bryant Fitts' legal backgrounds include clerking for the Texas Supreme Court, working for prestigious trial firms and representing over 100 of the workers injured at the British Petroleum Texas City explosion in February 2005. Since starting the firm in 2006, the firm and its partners have appeared on CNN, Good Morning America and in major newspapers all over the world.

Fitts Zehl tries to distinguish itself from other litigation firms by managing their case load so that they can always devote personal attention to their clients and their cases.

About the Firm

Areas of Law Practiced Fitts Zehl focuses on cases involving serious personal injuries, complicated business disputes and dangerous products. Most of their personal injury clients were either injured in serious car, truck or offshore accidents, or took a prescription drug that was later recalled by the FDA.
